WEISS' INNOCENCE PROJECT PRO BONO WORK FEATURED BY ACTL

Aug 11, 2021

BCLP Partner Charlie Weiss is featured in the summer edition of the American College of Trial Lawyers' Journal for his life-changing pro bono projects through The Innocence Project. Weiss took on his first Innocence Project case in 2006 – that of Josh Kezer, wrongly convicted in 1994 of the murder of Angela Lawless, despite no physical evidence of any kind linking him to the crime. Weiss headed a BCLP effort, along with Steve Snodgrass, to free him that ended with Kezer being judicially declared innocent and freed from prison in 2009. From that first case, Weiss and a BCLP team, including Snodgrass, Jonathan Potts and Ameer Gado, have gone on to obtain complete exoneration for three others: George Allen, Jr., after 30 years in prison; David Robinson, who spent 17 years in prison; and Donald “Doc” Nash, recently freed after 12 years in prison. “Charlie has, for years, been a godsend to the innocence community; the one person in ‘Big Law’ that could always be counted on to do the right thing in the tough cases,” said Barry Scheck, co-founder and co-director of The Innocence Project at the Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law in New York. Click here to read the full article, which begins in page 96. Weiss is a fellow of the ACTL.
