Latest European developments on measures to support transition towards a net-zero economy

On March 9, the European Commission adopted a series of measures to foster investment and financing the transition to climate neutrality and a net-zero industry in the EU. To this end, the Commission has: adopted a Temporary Crisis and Transition Framework to promote state support measures towards sectors which are key for the transition to a net-zero economy; amended the General Block Exemption Regulation («GBER») – which allows Member States to grant public support to specific categories of activities without seeking prior approval from the Commission – to encourage state support towards green and digital transition.
